INQUISITIONES POST MORTEM

FOR

MIDDLESEX AND LONDON.

To those who are unversed in record lose, some particulars about the Inquisitiones Post Mortem will be welcome. It must be remembered that these inquisitions, or inquests, have nothing whatever to do with the inquests which are still taken by coroners to ascertain the cause of death. Until the time of the Commonwealth the King was accustomed to levy certain dues at the death of every tenant in chief, and he was also entitled to the wardship of the heir-at-law if a minor, a privilege which was of no small value, as it meant also the right to receive the rents and profits during the minority and the right to make a match for the youthful heir, rights which very commonly were sold for hard cash. On the heir attaining his majority he had to sue out the livery of his lands, which involved strict proof on his part that he had attained 21, and the payment of further feudal dues. On the death, then, of any tenant in chief a writ was issued out of Chancery termed the writ of diem clausit extremum, which was directed to the Escheator of the county in which his land lay, and commanded him to summon a jury to enquire—1, what land the deceased died possessed of; 2, of whom and by what services the same was held; 3, the date of the death; 4, the name and age of the heirat-'aw. Accordingly the Escheator summoned a jury who upon oath made the necessary returns, which were embodied in the "Inquisition" and were returned in due course into the King's Chancery. Thence a copy was sent into the Exchequer in order that the Revenue officials might collect the feudal dues. If the jury made an insufficient return a second writ, known as the writ of melius inquirendum, was directed to the Escheator, ordering him to hold a second inquisition for better inquiring as to the facts omitted. Sometimes this process had to be repeated. In the reign of Henry VIII, in consequence of the abuses which had grown up of compelling landowners who were not tenants in capite to sue out their ouster le main, the Court of Wards and Liveries was established, to which a second transcript of the inquisition was sent from the Chancery. Consequently, from 35 Henry VIII there are three sets of the Inquisitiones Post Mortem to be found in the Public Record Office, viz., the Chancery Series, the Exchequer Series, and the Wards and Liveries Series. The deficiencies in the Chancery Series may often be made good from the transcripts in the other two. To show the immense value of these records both to the genealogist and the topographer we now give an abstract of the proceedings which took place on the death of Benjamin Garfeild, of Clerkenwell, who was of a Northamptonshire family, from which it seems probable that the late General Garfield, President of the United States, derived his descent. It should be borne in mind that the original, like the rest of these records, is in Latin :-

We now give lists of the Inquisitiones Post Mortem, both for the County of Middlesex and the City of London. They are extracted from the volumes of Calendars of Chancery series, which are labelled "Escheats," now kept in the "legal room," at the Public Record Office. It must be borne in mind that all these records were written in Latin. Amongst them are also some extracts taken virtute officii, and also some inquiries ad quod damnum. They are here arranged as entered under the reigns.
